

I received an e-mail notification that the FCC is considering taking action that might weaken the recently passed Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. PLEASE DO NOT DO THIS!

By subscribing to the "Do not call" list and using our phone service's voicemail, we have seen a dramatic reduction in unwanted sales calls during dinner time (6-8 p.m.) and those left during the working hours (8-5) that hang up when they detect an answering machine is being used, but still waste our time going through them to see if any meaningful calls were left on our machine.

As an MBA graduate, I can appreciate legislation that protects free enterprise.

However, as father of two, my desire to be left alone from telemarketers far outweighs this concern. The companies that utilize these annoying/intrusive tactics need to find other less invasive means to contact me (junk mail, tv/radio ads etc.). My time/privacy are too important to allow this law to be weakened!

Thank You!
